CONTRIBUTORS’ COLUMN

MICHAIL B. MONTGOMERY is professor emeritus of English at the University of South Carolina, where he continues to research and write about the history of American English, including its transatlantic connections. At present he is writing a historical grammar of the speech of Appalachia and is directing or codirecting three corpus projects, two on nineteenth-century letters by semiliterate writers and a third on the traditional speech of six states in the Appalachia region.

JENNIFER BLOOMQUIST received her Ph.D. in linguistics from SUNY at Buffalo in 2003. Her current projects include investigations into the differences between rural and urban, as well as between African American and European American varieties of speech in southeastern Pennsylvania. She is an assistant professor of linguistics and the coordinator of Africana studies at Gettysburg College.

WENDY BAKER is an assistant professor in the Department of Linguistics and English Language at Brigham Young University. Her research interests include second-language speech perception and production and dialect identification and perception.

DAVID EDDINGTON is a professor in the Department of Linguistics and English Language at Brigham Young University, where he specializes in experimental approaches to phonology and morphology.

LYNDSEY NAY recently received a master’s degree from the Department of Linguistics and English Language at Brigham Young University. Her master’s thesis focused on dialect identification.

JOHN CONSIDINE teaches English at the University of Alberta. His book Dictionaries in Early Modern Europe: Lexicography and the Making of Heritage was published by Cambridge University Press in 2008, and he is working on a sequel. He is the coeditor, with Sylvia Brown, of editions of the Ladies Dictionary of 1694, the printed works of Elizabeth Elstob on Old English, and three guides to foreign languages for early modern Englishwomen, all forthcoming from Ashgate Publishing.
EDITORIAL POLICY

American Speech is concerned principally with the English language in the Western Hemisphere, although contributions dealing with English in other parts of the world, with other languages influencing English or influenced by it, and with general linguistic theory may also be submitted for consideration by the Editorial Board. The journal welcomes articles dealing with current usage, dialectology, and the history and structure of English. American Speech is not committed to any particular theoretical framework, but preference is given to articles that are likely to be of interest to a wide readership.

MANUSCRIPTS FOR PUBLICATION

Books for review, manuscripts of articles for American Speech, and studies of monograph length for the Publication of the American Dialect Society series should be addressed to Charles E. Carson, Managing Editor, American Speech, Duke University Press, 905 W. Main St., Ste. 18B, Durham NC 27701-2075 (e-mail: amspeech@dukeupress.edu). Send items for possible inclusion in “Among the New Words” to Wayne Glowka, Department of English and Speech, Georgia College and State University, Milledgeville GA 31061-0490.

Three copies of a manuscript should be submitted. Authors should retain a copy, as manuscripts will not be returned. Manuscripts should be prepared in conformity with The Chicago Manual of Style (15th ed., 2003). Documentation must be given in the text itself using the author-date system (chap. 16), with a list of references at the end prepared in the humanities style. Endnotes should be on separate sheets before the references list. Figures, tables, and graphic materials must be suitable for typesetting or photographic reproduction and should be placed on separate sheets at the end of the manuscript.

Citation forms are to be italicized and glosses enclosed in single quotation marks, without intervening punctuation (e.g., hushpuppy ‘fried corn bread’). Technical terms and emphasized words should be indicated by double underlining for small capitals, rather than by italics. Phonetic and phonemic transcriptions should be restricted to the symbols of the International Phonetic Alphabet. Word lists should be prepared in accordance with the “Style Sheet for Glossaries” (American Speech 45 [1970]: 141–51).
