Martin. Black Camera is devoted to the study of the black cinematic experience and is the only scholarly film journal of its kind in the United States. It features essays and interviews that engage film in social as well as political contexts and in relation to historical and economic forces that bear on the reception, distribution, and production of film in local, regional, national, and transnational settings and environments.

In its first twenty years, Film History has published over 600 remarkable essays documenting every phase of the motion picture’s cultural, economic and technological development.

International in scope, its pages span the entire history of the medium, from the technological and entrepreneurial innovations of early and pre-cinema experimenters through all aspects of the production, marketing, distribution and reception of commercial and non-commercial motion pictures.

Each themed issue focuses on one particular subject, style, or movement, and often includes reprints of rare original documents and reviews of current books and DVDs.

Drawing on a wide range of contributors, from the field’s most respected historians to the groundbreaking work of a new generation of scholars, Film History speaks with authority, insight, and clarity.
