Contents

Introduction
Stephen Bernard, Claudine van Hensbergen, & John McTague  1

“The Job I Have Perhaps Rashly Undertaken”:
Publishing the Complete Correspondence of Samuel Richardson
Peter Sabor  9

Truly Yours: Arranging a Letter Collection
Temma Berg  29

“Into Whosoever Hands Our Letters Might Fall”:
Samuel Richardson’s Correspondence and “the Public Eye”
Louise Curran  51

“Why I Write Them, I Can Give No Account”:
Aphra Behn and “Love-Letters to a Gentleman” (1696)
Claudine van Hensbergen  65

“There Is No Such Man as Isaack Bickerstaff”:
Partridge, Pittis, and Jonathan Swift
John McTague  83

“I Hope to Write as Bad as Ever”:
Swift’s Journal to Stella and the Intimacy of Correspondence
Abigail Williams  102

The Economics of Ethical Conversation:
The Commerce of the Letter in Eliza Haywood and
Lady Mary Wortley Montagu
Ros Ballaster  119
The Plausible Selves of Sarah Scott (1721–95)
Nicole Pohl 133

“The Ceremonial of Letter for Letter”:
William Cowper and the Tempo of Epistolary Exchange
Sarah Haggarty 149

“I Will Carry You with Me on the Wings of Imagination”:
Aerial Letters and Eighteenth-Century Ballooning
Clare Brant 168

Postscript: “Tonson’s Remains”:
The Earliest Letters of Jacob Tonson the Elder
Stephen Bernard 188

Review Essays

You Are What You Don’t Eat
Beatrice Fink 208

The School of Henry
Scott R. MacKenzie 211

Afterlives
Jack Lynch 216

Troubling Amnesia: The Slave Trade in French and Francophone Literature and Culture
Maeve McCusker 221

The Emergence of a Science of Culture in Late Eighteenth-Century Germany
Robert Leventhal 226
Sculpting for (Old) Money
M. G. Sullivan 234

Henry Fielding, Politician?
Linda Bree 240