Latinx Lives in Hemispheric Context

This issue brings together a series of essays and position papers by emerging and established scholars who investigate points of intersection between Latinx, ethnic, and hemispheric American studies. With pieces on topics including child migrants, borderland biopolitics, field histories, ethnic “forgery,” the archive, performance and print cultures, and Charlottesville, the issue maps the way the lives of Latinx people, communities, and bodies of writing matter across the hemisphere, in history, and in our present time.
