Teaching the African Novel

Edited by Gaurav Desai

"This is an important book, one that [will] become an indispensable theoretical and practical guide for teachers of the African novel and of African literature in general."

—Simon Gikandi
Princeton University

What is the African novel, and how should it be taught? The twenty-three essays of this volume address these two questions and in the process convey a wealth of information and ideas about the diverse regions, peoples, nations, languages, and writers of the African continent.

The volume editor, Gaurav Desai, writes, "The point of the volume is to encourage a reading of Africa that is sensitive to its history of colonization but at the same time responsive to its present multiracial and multicultural condition."

NOVEL^{A FORUM ON FICTION}

Nancy Armstrong, editor

The official journal of the Society for Novel Studies

Concerned with the novel's role in engaging and shaping the world and with promoting critical discourse on the novel, Novel publishes significant work on fiction and related areas of research and theory. Special issues on the early American novel, eighteenth-century fiction, and postcolonial modernisms carry on Novel's long-standing interest in the Anglo-American tradition, while an issue dedicated to the contemporary African novel demonstrates the journal's increasingly global focus.

DUKE UNIVERSITY PRESS

Twentieth-Century Literature

New to Duke University Press in 2015!

Focusing on literary-cultural production emerging from or responding to the twentieth century, broadly construed, Twentieth-Century Literature offers essays, grounded in a variety of approaches, that interrogate and enrich the ways we understand the literary cultures of the times. The journal considers how those cultures are bound up with the crucial intellectual, social, aesthetic, political, economic, and environmental developments that have shaped the early twenty-first century.
