Teaching the African Novel

GAURAV DESAI, ed.

“This is an important book, one that is going to become an indispensable theoretical and practical guide for teachers of the African novel and indeed of African literature in general.”
—Simon Gikandi, Princeton University

What is the African novel, and how should it be taught? The twenty-three essays of this volume address these two questions and in the process convey a wealth of information and ideas about the diverse regions, peoples, nations, languages, and writers of the African continent.

By her own account, Virginia Woolf “never went to school or college,” educating herself by reading freely in her father’s extensive library. But newly-discovered documents in the archives of King’s College London tell a different story. In “‘Tilting at Universities’: Woolf at King’s College London,” Christine Kenyon Jones and Anna Snaith reproduce, for the first time, the enrolment lists, course descriptions, and examination pass lists relating to Virginia and her sister Vanessa’s studies at King’s College between 1897 and 1901.

Plus:

Bette London on the culture of memorialization and A Room of One’s Own;
Janice L. Stewart on Woolf, Freud, and Leslie Stephen;
James F. Wurtz on To the Lighthouse and the Empire;
Monica J. Miller on Woolf’s servant characters;
M-C Newbould on Woolf’s un-Victorian Sterne; and
Nicky Platt on Pointz Hall’s debt to Freud.

This volume also includes an updated Guide to Library Special Collections, and 15 reviews of new work in Woolf studies and modernism.
