

Pedagogy seeks to create a new discourse surrounding teaching in English studies by fusing theoretical approaches and practical realities. As a journal devoted exclusively to pedagogical issues, it is intended as a forum for critical reflection as well as a site for spirited and informed debate from a multiplicity of positions and perspectives. The journal strives to reverse the long-standing marginalization of teaching and the scholarship produced around it and instead to assert the centrality of teaching to our work as scholars and professionals.

Founding Coeditors

Jennifer L. Holberg, Calvin College

Marcy Taylor, Central Michigan University

Column Editors

From the Classroom

Elizabeth Brockman, Central Michigan University

Reviews

Mark C. Long, Keene State College

Managing Editor

Isabelle Selles

Editorial Board

Barclay Barrios, Florida Atlantic University

David Bartholomae, University of Pittsburgh

Michael Bérubé, Pennsylvania State University

Martin Bickman, University of Colorado

David Bleich, University of Rochester

Sheila T. Cavanagh, Emory University

Shawn Christian, Wheaton College (MA)

Danielle Nicole DeVoss, Michigan State University

Gerald Graff, University of Illinois at Chicago

Salah Hassan, Michigan State University

Ann Jurecic, Rutgers University

Paul Lauter, Trinity College (Hartford, CT)

Shirley Geok-lin Lim, University of California, Santa Barbara

Harriet Kramer Linkin, New Mexico State University

Donald Marshall, Pepperdine University

Jerome McGann, University of Virginia

Richard E. Miller, Rutgers University

E. Shelley Reid, George Mason University

Mariolina Salvatori, University of Pittsburgh