

International Journal for Theory and Analysis of Literature and Communication

Volume 40, Number 3 September 2019

Special Issue: Knowledge, Understanding, Well-Being:
Cognitive Literary Studies
Nancy Easterlin, Guest Editor

Introduction: Cognitive Literary Studies and the Well-Lived Life
Nancy Easterlin, University of New Orleans 377

I. Reader Processing and Psychology

Neuroscience, Narrative, and Narratology
Paul B. Armstrong, Brown University 395

Personal Relevance in Story Reading: A Research Review
*Anežka Kuzmičová, Department of Culture and Aesthetics, Stockholm University Institute of Literature, Czech Academy of Sciences, and Katalin Bálint,
Department of Communication Sciences, VU University Amsterdam* 429

How Does Leisure Reading Affect Social Cognitive Abilities?
Micah L. Mumper and Richard J. Gerrig, Stony Brook University 453

II. Empathy and Literary Ethics

“Some Powerful Rankling Passion”: An Interdisciplinary Exploration of Emotion Regulation Strategies in Joanna Baillie’s Passion Plays
M. Soledad Caballero and Aimee Knupsky, Allegheny College 475

Adaptive Affective Cognition in Literature and Its Impact on Legal Reason and Social Practice
Marshall Alcorn and Michael O’Neill, George Washington University 499

Can—and Should—Literary Study Develop Moral Character and Advance Social Justice? Answers from Cognitive Science
Mark Bracher, Kent State University 519

On Punishment and Why We Enjoy It in Fiction: Lisbeth
Salander of the Millennium Trilogy and Eli in *Let the Right
One In* as Scandinavian Avengers
Margrethe Bruun Vaage, University of Kent 543

III. Healing Planet, Species, and Self

Why We Care about (Non)fictional Places: Empathy, Character, and Narrative Environment
Alexa Weik von Mossner, University of Klagenfurt 559

Nonhuman Fictional Characters and the Empathy-Altruism Hypothesis
Erin James, University of Idaho 579

The Poetry and Practice of Meditation
Elizabeth Bradburn, Western Michigan University 597

Notes on Contributors 615