Volume 28, no. 1:

John L. Jackson Jr. takes on policing, paranoia, and state surveillance; S. D. Chrostowska brings some order to our nostalgia for old books; Michael C. Dawson and Megan Ming Francis explore the embrace of neoliberalism in black politics; Jasmine Nichole Cobb scrutinizes the installation of black freedom in the White House; Robert Horwitz analyzes the reasons for the revival of liberal Protestant theologian Reinhold Niebuhr; Jonny Steinberg examines a paradox about forced migration; Stefan Tanaka argues that chronological time impedes historical understanding; Claudio Benzecry interviews José Emilio Burucúa about art and modernity in South America; and more . . .
Call for Contributions

Public Culture aims to publish original research of the highest caliber, and we welcome your submissions. We value strong writing, clear argumentation, imaginative theory, and an engaging prose style. Public Culture reaches an audience that transcends scholarly disciplines and extends beyond the academy. We seek work that persuades through evidence, logic, and analysis and that presumes no shared theoretical proclivities, political values, or specialized vocabularies.

Brief opinion-oriented pieces (of 500–3,000 words) run at the front of each issue in the Forum section. Full-length articles (of 6,000–9,000 words) based on original research are at the core. We also feature in-depth discussions with leading contemporary thinkers. Typically, we are familiar only with scholarly labor’s final results, published books and articles, or occasional lectures. The interviews we publish call attention to the backstage of intellectual practice. In addition to original research essays, opinion pieces, and conversations, Public Culture welcomes translations of previously published, groundbreaking essays.

Our sister publication, Public Books (www.publicbooks.org), welcomes proposals for review essays about books (fiction or nonfiction), films, exhibitions, or plays, as well as profiles of intellectuals or literary scenes, visual essays, and multimedia work. Authors interested in submitting to Public Books should send proposals of 500 words or fewer to editorial@publicbooks.org.
