PUBLIC SPHERES AND THE GLOBALIZATION OF MEDIA

1995-96
Globalized Production of Local Identities

Applications are sought from scholars, critics, and cultural producers (with appropriate professional training) involved in the theory and practice of mass media in regional contexts—Africa, Asia, Latin America, Europe, or North America, though projects involving other regions will also be considered. The Institute anticipates residential awards for a University Fellowship (9 months) and several Institute Fellowships (3 - 4 months). The application deadline is February 1, 1995. Write to:

"Diaspora" evokes powerful images of exile and longing. It has been used since antiquity to designate the dispersion of Greeks, Jews, and Armenians. Recently, new polities ranging from the African-American and Ukrainian-Canadian to the Chinese-American, the Quebecois, and the Palestinian have entered the semantic domain diasporas share with exile and ethnic communities, immigrants, expatriates, refugees, and guest workers.

Diaspora: A Journal of Transnational Studies is a forum for the analysis of the contending “others” that pose cultural, political, and economic challenges to the hegemony and homogeneity claimed by nation-states. The journal addresses the entire range of phenomena encompassed by various uses of “transnationalism,” including movements of people, such as massive migrations that traverse porous frontiers, and movements of capital, technology, and mass media productions that complicate the meanings and consequences of multiculturalism.

Diaspora is an international and interdisciplinary journal that explores these phenomena as they have functioned since antiquity and in the context of emergent global systems. It publishes contributions from the disciplines of history, literature, political science, cultural studies, anthropology, religious studies, sociology, economics, linguistics, psychology, geography, and musicology. Because nation, diaspora, and transnationalism are contested concepts, the journal offers a forum for debate about the past and present theoretical foundations of these terms.

Where the outspoken speak out.
In 1961, some of Africa’s most provocative thinkers started speaking out in a new magazine called Transition. It pulled no punches. The New York Times called it “Africa’s slickest, sprightliest, and occasionally sexiest magazine.” Editor Rajat Neogy refused to listen when told by government officials that Transition was speaking a little too loudly. He was subsequently sent to jail. After 50 uncensored, unguarded, and uninhibited issues, Transition ceased publication because of political and economic pressure.

Transition is back. It’s about time.
From the politics of pornography to extra-terrestrial abductions, from homomachismo to niggaz with beatitude, from the bounty of blaxploitation to the dead end of identity politics, the new Transition tackles today’s most controversial issues head-on. Though keeping an emphasis on African and African-American concerns, the new Transition has taken on the world. No idea, thought, person, belief, or subject is considered out of bounds. Today’s most original thinkers—novelists, playwrights, poets, critics, filmmakers—are saying what’s on their mind. And they’re saying it in Transition.

From the pages of Transition
Orlando Patterson on the black parent trap • Jeffrey Melnick on blacks and Jews blues • Run-DMC on niggaz with beatitude • Ilan Stavans on the Latin phallus • Nuruddin Farah on global homelessness • Scott L. Malcolmson on the revolution that wasn’t televised • B. Ruby Rich on public art in an age of privatization • Graham Huggan on the politics of the Booker Prize • Jianying Zha on the Chinese cultural industry • Sander L. Gilman on slavery and the Holocaust • Bili T. Jones on art and identity

COMPTES RENDUS — LIVRES REÇUS
"OCTOBER, the 15-year-old quarterly of social and cultural theory, has always seemed special. Its nonprofit status, its cross-disciplinary forays into film and psychoanalytic thinking, and its unyielding commitment to history set it apart from the glossy art magazines." Village Voice

At the leading edge of arts criticism and theory today, OCTOBER focuses on the contemporary arts and their various contexts of interpretation. Original, innovative, provocative, each issue examines interrelationships between the arts and their critical and social contexts.

Come join OCTOBER's exploration of the most important issues in contemporary culture.

Eye on Culture

Mapping World Communication
War, Progress, Culture

Armand Mattelart

Susan Emanuel and James A. Cohen, translators

“...This important book accomplishes for global communication what Said did for Orientalism and Foucault for modern disciplinary apparatuses. . . . It sets the stage for a transnational critique of the techniques and theories of global communication.”

- Arjun Appadurai, University of Chicago

$18.95 paper  $49.95 cloth  312 pages  (1994)

Remapping Memory
The Politics of TimeSpace

Jonathan Boyarin, Editor

An intriguing collection of essays offering a new way of understanding how the politics of space, time and memory are negotiated to bring people to terms with their history.

Paper $18.95  208 pages  (1994)

The Administration of Aesthetics
Censorship, Political Criticism, and the Public Sphere

Richard Burt, Editor

“Radically historicizes and redefines what ‘censorship’ is. . . . For anyone interested in issues of culture and power, this anthology is a fabulous pedagogical act.”

- Lauren Berlant, University of Chicago

$21.95 paper  $49.95 cloth  416 pages  21 photographs  (1994)

Small Media, Big Revolution
Communication, Culture, and the Iranian Revolution

Annabelle Sreberny-Mohammadi and Ali Mohammadi

The first account of the role of culture and communication in the Iranian revolution, this is also the first book to consider revolution as communication in the modern world.
