DAVID AUSTIN is a community worker and independent researcher based in Montreal, Canada. He is also a founder of the Alfie Roberts Institute, an independent, community-based social change organization and research and documentation center, also based in Montreal. He is currently editing the proceedings of the 1968 Congress of Black Writers for publication.

AVRAM BORNSTEIN teaches in the Department of Anthropology at John Jay College, CUNY. He is the author of Crossing the Green Line: Borders and Apartheid in the Palestinian West Bank (2001).

MEREDITH M. GADSBY is an assistant professor of African American studies at Oberlin College. Her work focuses on literatures of Africa and the African diaspora. Presently she is working on a study titled “Little Salt Won’t Kill You: Caribbean Women Writers, Migration and the Politics of Survival.”

GLYNE GRIFFITH is associate professor of English at Bucknell University, Lewisburg, Pennsylvania. He is the author of Deconstruction Imperialism and the West Indian Novel (1996), and is completing a book on Henry Swanzy and the BBC “Caribbean Voices” radio program.

YANICK LAHENS is a Haitian essayist, a novelist and a teacher. In 1994, she published her first fictional work, a collection of short stories, Tante Résia et les dieux, followed by La Petite corruption, in 1999. Her first novel, Dans la maison du père, was published in France in 2000. One of her stories from Tante Résia et les dieux has been translated in English and published in Charles Rowell’s anthology, Ancestral House (1995). She is an active member of the Association of Haitian Writers and of the Conseil International d’Études Francophones (CIEF).

NALINI PERSRAM is a lecturer in the Department of Political Science, Trinity College, Dublin, where she teaches international relations and nationalism. Her research interests include comparative colonial history, political theory, feminism, the Caribbean and postcoloniality. She is working on a book that focuses on nationalist discourse and post-colonial identity in Guyana.

DAVID SCOTT teaches in the Department of Anthropology at Columbia University, New York. He is working on a manuscript called “Conscripts of Political Modernity.”

FAITH SMITH is an associate professor at Brandeis University, Waltham, where she teaches Caribbean literature and African American literature. Her book on J. J. Thomas and nineteenth-century intellectual formation in the anglophone Caribbean will be published by University of Virginia Press.