Contributors

Hishaam D. Aidi teaches political science in the School of International and Public Affairs at Columbia University. He is preparing a manuscript on the Moor and al-Andalus in the Hispanic political imagination.

Nerissa S. Balce is assistant professor of comparative literature at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst, where she teaches courses on ethnic studies, Asian American literature and film, postcolonial studies, race, and popular culture. She is preparing a manuscript on American imperialism as a visual language and the representation of the Filipino and Filipina savage.

Patrick Deer teaches in the Department of English at New York University, where he focuses on war culture, modernism, the twentieth-century novel and film, and postcolonial and cultural studies. He recently completed the manuscript of “Culture in Camouflage: War, Empire, and Modern British Literature.” His published work includes “The Dogs of War: Myths of British Anti-Americanism,” in Anti-Americanism, ed. Andrew Ross and Kristin Ross (New York University Press), and “Defusing the English Patient,” an essay on the film adaptation of Michael Ondaatje’s novel commissioned for A Companion to Literature and Film, ed. Robert Stam (Blackwell).

Ana Dopico teaches in the Department of Comparative Literature and the Department of Spanish and Portuguese at New York University. She is the author of “Houses Divided: Political Imaginaries and Genealogical Fictions,” forthcoming from Duke University Press. She is the critical editor of Jose Marti: Politics and Letters, 2 vols., forthcoming from Oxford University Press. She is presently at work on a book about Cuban national culture titled “Cubanologies: Altered States of the Nation.”

Stathis Gourgouris is professor of comparative literature at UCLA. His most recent book is Does Literature Think? Literature as Theory for an Antimythical Era (Stanford University Press).
Gil Z. Hochberg is assistant professor of comparative literature at UCLA, where she teaches courses on Israeli and Palestinian literature and film, postcolonial theory, and the politics of memory. Her recent articles include “The ‘Problem of Immigration’ from a Child’s Point of View: The Poetics of Abjection in Albert Swissa’s Aqud and Farida Belghoul’s Georgette!” and “‘Permanent Immigration’: Ronit Matalon, Jacqueline Kahanoff, and the Impetus of Levantinism.” Her manuscript “In Spite of Partition: Jews, Arabs, and the Limits of Separatist Imagination” examines the relationship between the names “Arab” and “Jew” in contemporary Jewish and Arab literary texts.

Iveta Jusová is assistant professor of women’s studies and director of the Comparative Women’s Studies in Europe Program at Antioch College, Yellow Springs, Ohio. She has published articles on Czech and British women writers and actresses in both U.S. and Czech journals. Her research focuses on nineteenth-century British literature, postcolonial studies, and feminist philosophies.

Ioana Luca is a lecturer in the Department of English at the University of Bucharest, where she teaches courses in American studies and American literature. She is completing her PhD with a dissertation titled “The Autobiography of Displacement in Contemporary American Literature.”

Gyan Prakash is professor of history and director of the Shelby Cullom Davis Center for Historical Studies at Princeton University. His recent publications include Worlds Together, Worlds Apart: A History of the Modern World (1300 to the Present) (Norton).

Sura P. Rath is professor of English and director of the William O. Douglas Honors College at Central Washington University. He has recently coedited U. R. Anantha Murthy’s “Samskara”: A Critical Reader and Dialogics of Cultural Encounters: Nations and Nationalities in Periods of Conflict, both published by Pencraft International (New Delhi), and is working on a book on V. S. Naipaul.
Dan Reyes is assistant professor of arts, humanities, and cultural studies and core faculty member with the Individualized Liberal and Professional Studies Program at Antioch University McGregor. With an interdisciplinary background in cultural studies, literary theory, and the design arts, his current areas of inquiry include cultural economies and the negotiation of public culture in a global age.

Ella Shohat is professor of cultural studies at New York University. Her books include Israeli Cinema: East/West and the Politics of Representation, Unthinking Eurocentrism (coauthored), Talking Visions: Multicultural Feminism in a Transnational Age, and the coedited Dangerous Liaisons: Gender, Nation, and Postcolonial Perspectives and Multiculturalism, Postcoloniality, and Transnational Media. She is coediting a volume on the cultural politics of the Middle East throughout the Americas for the University of Michigan Press and finishing two manuscripts—“Flagging Patriotism: Exceptionalism, Narcissism and Anti-Americanism” (Routledge) and “The Culture Wars in Translation” (New York University Press)—coauthored with Robert Stam. Her book Taboo Memories, Diasporic Voices is forthcoming from Duke University Press.
