Urban Margins:
Envisioning the Contemporary Global South
Special Issue
Editors Kamran Asdar Ali and Martina Rieker

Introduction: Urban Margins • Kamran Asdar Ali and Martina Rieker 1

Emergency Democracy and the “Governing Composite”
 AbdouMaliq Simone 13

“City of Whores”: Nationalism, Development, and Global Garment Workers in Sri Lanka • Sandya Hewamanne 35

Urban Modernity on the Periphery: A New Middle Class Reinvents the Palestinian City • Lisa Taraki 61

In the Ruins of Bahl: Reconstructed Forts and Crumbling Walls in an Omani Town • Mandana E. Limbert 83

“Mardi Gras Geishas (Batters)” [photograph] • Nic Sammond 105

The Gnat and the Sovereign • Allen Feldman 107

With Ice in Their Ears • Allen Feldman 111

Witchcraft • Rosalind Morris 113
Kamran Asdar Ali is associate professor of anthropology at the University of Texas, Austin. He is the author of Planning the Family in Egypt: New Bodies, New Selves (2002). He is the coeditor of Gendering Urban Space in the Middle East, South Asia, and Africa (forthcoming) with Martina Rieker, with whom he also coordinates the Shehr Network on Comparative Urban Landscapes. He is currently writing a book-length manuscript on the social history of the labor movement in Pakistan.

Allen Feldman, associate professor of media culture and communication at New York University, is a political and medical anthropologist who conducts ethnographic and social historical research in the visual culture of violence and political terror, the politics of the senses and embodiment, practice-led media research, and the philosophy of media. He has conducted field research and published on the civil war in Northern Ireland, the South African Truth Commission, policing homelessness, and AIDS in New York City, and is currently writing a book for Duke University Press titled “The Animal and the Subjectile: A Political Theory of the Virtual.”

Sandya Hewamanne is assistant professor of anthropology at Drake University. She received her BA in sociology from the University of Colombo, Sri Lanka, and her MA and PhD in anthropology from the University of Texas at Austin. She is the author of Stitching Identities in a Free Trade Zone: Gender and Politics in Sri Lanka (University of Pennsylvania Press, 2008). Her work has also appeared in journals such as Feminist Studies, Cultural Dynamics, and Anthropology of Work Review. Her research interests include globalization, identity, cultural politics, and feminist and postcolonial theory.

Mandana E. Limbert is associate professor of anthropology at Queens College and the Graduate Center, CUNY. Her book Of Ties and Time: Gender, Sociality, and Modernity in Oman is forthcoming from Stanford University Press. She is coediting a volume on resources and temporalities for the School of American Research advanced seminar series and has begun a new project on notions of Arabness in Oman and Zanzibar.
Rosalind Morris is an anthropologist and cultural critic whose research focuses on South Africa and mainland Southeast Asia. Her books and essays address questions about the mass media, the cultural history of modernity, the relationships between value and violence, and the historical organization of gender and sexuality. “Witchcraft” is part of a series of essays titled “American Mythologies,” the first of which was published in the inaugural issue of /nor (New Ohio Review).

Martina Rieker is director of the Institute for Gender and Women’s Studies at the American University in Cairo. She is coeditor of Gendering Urban Space in the Middle East, South Asia, and Africa (forthcoming) with Kamran Asdar Ali, with whom she coordinates the Shehr Network on Comparative Urban Landscapes.

AbdouMaliq Simone is a professor of sociology at Goldsmiths College and a visiting professor at the Institute of Social and Economic Research, University of Witwatersrand. He has taught at the University of Khartoum, University of Ghana, University of the Western Cape, and the City University of New York, as well as worked for several African NGOs and regional institutions, including the Council for the Development of Social Science Research in Africa, the United Nations Economic Commission for Africa, and the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements. His key publications include In Whose Image? Political Islam and Urban Practices in Sudan (University of Chicago Press, 1994) and For the City Yet to Come: Changing Urban Life in Four African Cities (Duke University Press, 2004).

Lisa Taraki is an associate professor of sociology and dean of graduate studies at Birzeit University in Palestine. Her research and publications have focused on the Palestinian national movement; Islamist politics in Palestine, Jordan, and the Middle East; Palestinian urban social history; and most recently dynamics of class and community in three urban communities in the West Bank. She is the editor of and a contributor to Living Palestine: Family Survival, Resistance, and Mobility under Occupation (2006).