Bruce Benderson is the author of many books, including Pretending to Say No, User, Pacific Agony, and James Bidgood, and a collection of essays, Sex and Isolation. His memoir The Romanian was awarded the Prix de Flore. He is a frequent contributor to journals, magazines, and blogs, and his writings have appeared in Parallax, Twentieth-Century Literary Criticism, Lambda Book Report, Village Voice, Artnet, Têtu, among others. He lives in New York.

Ashley Dawson is professor of English at the City University of New York’s Graduate Center. He is the author of the Routledge Concise History of Twentieth-Century British Literature (2013) and Mongrel Nation: Diasporic Culture and the Making of Postcolonial Britain (2007), and is also coeditor of three essay collections.

Denise Ferreira da Silva is professor and chair in ethics and the director of the Centre for Ethics and Politics at Queen Mary, University of London. Her writings on critical legal theory and political theory focus on racial and postcolonial dimensions of the global present.

Randy Martin is professor and chair of art and public policy at New York University. He is author, most recently, of Under New Management: Universities, Administrative Labor, and the Professional Turn.

Charlie Samuyu Veric teaches at De La Salle University–Manila. He holds a PhD in American Studies from Yale University where he was a member of the Working Group on Globalization and Culture; the Initiative on Race, Gender, and Globalization; and the Photographic Memory Workshop. He currently sits on the Technical Panel on Literature at the Commission on Higher Education of the Republic of the Philippines. Also a poet and translator, he experiments with world systems theory and close cultural analysis.
Tryon P. Woods teaches in the sociology, anthropology, and crime and justice studies department at the University of Massachusetts, Dartmouth, where he is affiliated with black studies and women and gender studies; and in africana studies at Rhode Island College. His work includes Ethical Confrontations with Antiblackness: Africana Studies in the Twenty-First Century (forthcoming), which he is coediting with P. Khalil Saucier.