
Greg L. Childs is assistant professor of history at Brandeis University. He is currently completing Seditious Spaces, Public Politics: Antiracism, Freedom, and Sedition in 1798 Bahia, Brazil (forthcoming). He is a frequent contributor to the African American Intellectual History Society blog.

Thulani Davis is assistant professor of Afro-American studies and a Nellie Y. McKay Fellow at the University of Wisconsin–Madison. She is the author of 1959 (1992), My Confederate Kinfolk (2006), and several works in film and theater and was awarded the 2013 Lerner Prize in American Studies at New York University.

Elizabeth Maddock Dillon is professor of English at Northeastern University and codirector of the NULab for Texts, Maps, and Networks. She is the author of New World Drama: The Performative Commons in the Atlantic World, 1659–1859 (2014) and The Gender of Freedom: Fictions of Liberalism and the Literary Public Sphere (2007).

Laura Helton is a visiting fellow at the Center for Humanities and Information at Pennsylvania State University. She will join the University of Delaware’s Department of English as assistant professor of print and material culture studies in 2017. She is working on a manuscript titled “Collecting and Collectivity: Black Archival Publics, 1900–1950.”

Justin Leroy is a postdoctoral fellow in global American studies at Harvard University and assistant professor of history at the University of California, Davis. He is at work on a book titled “Freedom’s Limit: Slavery and Its Afterlives in the Long Nineteenth Century.”

Lisa Lowe is professor of English and American studies at Tufts University and a member of the Consortium of Studies on Race, Colonialism, and Diaspora. She is the author of books on orientalism, immigration, colonialism, and globalization, including Intimacies of Four Continents (2015).

Max A. Mishler is a PhD candidate and Mellon fellow in history at New York University. His dissertation is titled “The Atlantic Origins of Mass Incarceration: Punishment, Abolition, and Racial Inequality.”

Britt Rusert is assistant professor of African American literature and culture in the W. E. B. Du Bois Department of Afro-American Studies at the University of Massachusetts Amherst. She is completing a book-length manuscript titled “Fugitive Science: Empiricism and Freedom in Early African American Culture.”

Claudio Saunt is the Richard B. Russell Professor of American History at the University of Georgia and codirector of the website eHistory (ehistory.org). He is the author of West of the Revolution: An Uncommon History of 1776 (2014) and the Invasion of America project (invasionofamerica.ehistory.org).

Samantha Seeley is an assistant professor in the Department of History at the University of Richmond. She is working on a book manuscript titled “Race and Removal in the Early American Republic.”
Shauna Sweeney is a postdoctoral fellow in history at New York University. She is working on a book manuscript titled “A Free Enterprise: Market Women, Insurgent Economies, and the Making of Caribbean Freedom.”
