Toward a Just Israel

Twenty-five years ago, when many of us thought a Jewish vision for a just and compassionate society was losing its power to persuade and inspire, Tikkan magazine voiced a clarion call to do just that! And for these twenty-five years it has persisted in pushing us and pestering us to think and to act. It has pushed us to fight injustice, to demand equality, and to mend the terrible injuries inflicted on women, the poor, and the marginalized. It has urged us to save the environment. In the spirit of our suffering of Palestinians and reach a equality, and to end the terrible just and compassionate society was been passionate. It has empowere d the great prophetic tradition, Tikkun magazine voiced a clarion call to open the conversation, spread the word, and marches on world capitols when necessary.

I hope and pray that Tikkan will continue to be that vehicle to move us toward a redeemed world, to ignite our hope, and to fight despair.

As I struggle to keep Jerusalem shalem (whole), home to the three monotheistic religions, open to Jews of all streams, and to build a State of Israel that will indeed be a “light to the nations,” I know that Rabbi Michael Lerner and Tikkan echo these hopes and envision these dreams.

Rabbi Naamah Kelman
Jerusalem, Israel

Interns and Volunteers for Summer 2011 and September 2011–June 2012

Interns and volunteers help with a wide variety of projects:

1. Editorial work such as reviewing submissions, proofreading, and light editing of articles, as well as helping us find the best new writers and thinkers (particularly younger or undiscovered talent).
2. Finding art for the magazine.
3. Web-based technical work.
5. Assisting with the business aspects of the magazine.
6. Working on the Global Marshall Plan or the Environmental and Social Responsibility Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.
7. Projects around Middle East peace.
8. Assisting Rabbi Lerner at Beit Tikkan synagogue and with his writing projects.

Info and application procedure for these unpaid positions: tikkan.org/jobs

---

In a world and at a time when our planet is so vulnerable, when our Jewish world needs a mission to restore its faith and commitment to our legacy of tikkun olam, Tikkan magazine opens the conversation, spreads the word, and marches on world capitols when necessary.

I hope and pray that Tikkan will continue to be that vehicle to move us toward a redeemed world, to ignite our hope, and to fight despair.

As I struggle to keep Jerusalem shalem (whole), home to the three monotheistic religions, open to Jews of all streams, and to build a State of Israel that will indeed be a “light to the nations,” I know that Rabbi Michael Lerner and Tikkan echo these hopes and envision these dreams.