Another Award for Tikkun

Tikkun is the proud winner of the prestigious 2014 “Magazine of the Year: Overall Excellence in Religion Coverage” award from the Religion Newswriters Association!

Visit tikkun.org/rna to learn more.

You already know many people whose lives would be enriched by Tikkun. Give them a subscription to Tikkun for Christmas, Chanukah, or any other winter holiday.

If you send us your gift recipients’ addresses and a check made out to Tikkun ($29 per gift subscription) by December 1, we’ll send them each a card announcing your gift, which will start with the Winter 2015 issue. Just let us know which holiday you want us to mention and any other text you want us to include!

To order . . .
• Email alena@tikkun.org
• Call 510-644-1200
• Or mail your request to:
  Tikkun Holiday Gifts
  2342 Shattuck Ave, #1200
  Berkeley, CA 94704

You can also order online: tikkun.org/donate

$5.95 U.S.

EMBRACING GOD’S QUEerness

FALL 2014
POLITICS + SPIRITUALITY + CULTURE

Disability Justice and Spirituality
Tikkun

Channukah and Christmas both celebrate the return of hope and light at the very moment when the days are shortest and the darkness most overpowering.

For many progressives, broken promises from Democratic Party politicians have given hope a bad name. Many of us feel disillusioned by how President Obama’s “change you can believe in” transformed into six years of capitulation to the agenda of the super rich and their corporations, with only minor side steps to help those who suffer most from the capitalist rat race. We’re disheartened by the Wall Street bailout, which saved big banks from a financial crisis they created while leaving millions of Americans unemployed and homeless. We’re frustrated that the Affordable Care Act forces people to buy coverage from private health insurance companies but fails to impose serious constraints and limits on how much these companies can charge. We’re outraged by U.S. drone attacks against innocent civilians in Iraq and Afghanistan and by U.S. threats to wage war against Iran over its attempt to develop nuclear weapons that the United States and its allies have. We’re disheartened by recent trade agreements that enable global corporations to evade social and environmental constraints domestically. And we’re horrified that the Obama administration has deported more immigrants than all previous administrations combined. No wonder so many Americans don’t bother to vote at all, expressing cynicism about visionary ideas.

These problems are real, but there is still reason to hope. We urge you to let the spirit of Channukah and Christmas remind you of the fact that most people on this planet yearn for something totally different. Let these holidays speak to you so that you can reconnect to your most hopeful part—and then join with us at Tikun, become part of our campaign for the Environmental and Social Responsibility Amendment to the U.S. Constitution (ERSA), our push for a Global Marshall Plan, our call for an openhearted transformation of consciousness in Israel and Palestine, and our creation of professional task forces to envision what a world based on a new bottom line of love and generosity would actually look like. Don’t let the light go out—in you or others. Keep the faith and let the spirit of hope return, whether in the form of a holy baby in a manger in Bethlehem, a struggle by the Maccabean guerrilla army against the mightiest colonial power of its time, or whatever other spiritual figures you draw upon to keep hope alive.

And help us keep Tikun alive by joining the Network of Spiritual Progressives at spiritualprogressives.org and buying gift subscriptions to Tikun for friends, coworkers, and people in your civic, religious, and political communities!

Chanukah and Christmas both celebrate the return of hope and light at the very moment when the days are shortest and the darkness most overpowering.

For many progressives, broken promises from Democratic Party politicians have given hope a bad name. Many of us feel disillusioned by how President Obama’s “change you can believe in” transformed into six years of capitulation to the agenda of the super rich and their corporations, with only minor side steps to help those who suffer most from the capitalist rat race. We’re disheartened by the Wall Street bailout, which saved big banks from a financial crisis they created while leaving millions of Americans unemployed and homeless. We’re frustrated that the Affordable Care Act forces people to buy coverage from private health insurance companies but fails to impose serious constraints and limits on how much these companies can charge. We’re outraged by U.S. drone attacks against innocent civilians in Iraq and Afghanistan and by U.S. threats to wage war against Iran over its attempt to develop nuclear weapons that the United States and its allies have. We’re disheartened by recent trade agreements that enable global corporations to evade social and environmental constraints domestically. And we’re horrified that the Obama administration has deported more immigrants than all previous administrations combined. No wonder so many Americans don’t bother to vote at all, expressing cynicism about visionary ideas.

These problems are real, but there is still reason to hope. We urge you to let the spirit of Channukah and Christmas remind you of the fact that most people on this planet yearn for something totally different. Let these holidays speak to you so that you can reconnect to your most hopeful part—and then join with us at Tikun, become part of our campaign for the Environmental and Social Responsibility Amendment to the U.S. Constitution (ERSA), our push for a Global Marshall Plan, our call for an openhearted transformation of consciousness in Israel and Palestine, and our creation of professional task forces to envision what a world based on a new bottom line of love and generosity would actually look like. Don’t let the light go out—in you or others. Keep the faith and let the spirit of hope return, whether in the form of a holy baby in a manger in Bethlehem, a struggle by the Maccabean guerrilla army against the mightiest colonial power of its time, or whatever other spiritual figures you draw upon to keep hope alive.

And help us keep Tikun alive by joining the Network of Spiritual Progressives at spiritualprogressives.org and buying gift subscriptions to Tikun for friends, coworkers, and people in your civic, religious, and political communities!

The Soul of the New World

Neoliberalism’s War on Higher Education

It is not only new action that the world needs, but also new thinking. These few books yield a deep understanding of the multidimensional crisis that ties humanity into an inhumane, unjust, and environmentally calamitous social order while keeping us passive in a variety of ways. Duke University Press has done social visionaries a real service by printing Martin Jay and Samhita Ramaswamy’s massive collection of insightful articles unveiling how the very way we see the world is daily shaped by “pictorial practices, image-making technologies, and vision-oriented subjectivities” that have been “entangled in empire-building, nationalist reactions, postcolonial contestations, and transnational globalization.” It is not just economic or military power that shapes the way we see the world, but also photographs, paintings, maps, and the whole range of visual arts and media that are scrutinized in this collection.

Roger Scruton gets at the depravity of the current world from a very different angle, capturing the way that most humans cannot be at home in market-based societies because we experience transcendental obligations and sacred attachments that cannot be subject to the logic of the marketplace or to the ultra-individualism fostered by the notion that “choice” is the ultimate value. Henry Giroux focuses much more than Scruton on what has made the alienation and depravity of the current situation plausible. In particular, he examines the war that neoliberalism must fight against any form of education that does not reduce human values and a reverence for God to that which can be measured and monetized in the capitalist marketplace. Neoliberalism’s assault, Giroux tells us, undermines higher education’s ability to foster values like caring for the other, produces cultural illiteracy, and makes it hard for students to believe in the possibility of fundamental change.

Ultimately, the values underlying academia’s transformation into a “service station” to society (as former University of California president Clark Kerr put it fifty years ago) are the values of the global economy. In her book on the global economy, Saskia Sassen unleashes the brutality that continues to accompany the transnational struggles for land, race, materials, and markets. She also exposes companies’ ruthless irrationality to the destruction of the earth and the expulsion of human beings from their homelands. We in the advanced industrial societies benefit most from the corporations that are in the vanguard of these expulsions, and yet we get the disproportional with arrests, humiliation, and deportation.

Striking a more optimistic note, Michael Nagler expresses hope in the growth of a global nonviolent movement that can fight back more effectively when we mobilize people around their highest values, so that anger and violence are replaced by resilient and disruptive nonviolence. His useful handbook should be in the toolkit of every social change activist.

Like Rumi, the great Christian mystic Meister Eckhart was—according to Matthew Fox’s brilliant and inspiring account—deeply ecumenical, encompassing wisdom that he can find in Jewish, Sufi, Buddhist, and Hindu mystical traditions. Eckhart advocated for social, economic, and gender justice. He also championed an earth-based spirituality and taught that we are artists whose vocation is to birth the Cosmic Christ (or Buddha Nature).

This collection of scholarly yet accessible articles by dozens of Jewish and Muslim experts is the definitive source for understanding a complex relationship between Muslims and Jews from the seventh century to the present day. Its 374 pages cover pressing political issues like whether Jews are demeaned in Islam and whether Jews faced real (as opposed to just remembered) anti-Semitism in Islamic societies. It also explores the ways in which contemporary Islamophobia and anti-Semitism are both products and causes of the political struggle between Israelis and Palestinians. Yet the richness of this fantastical and exciting book lies also in its descriptions of how Jews and Muslims have learned from each other in the arenas of philosophy, science, art, literature, and mysticism.