Twentieth-Century Literature

Published by Hofstra University
Contributors

Carolyn A. Durham is the Inez K. Gaylord Professor of French at the College of Wooster, where she also chairs the Comparative Literature Program. Her most recent book is Double Takes: Culture and Gender in French Films and Their American Remakes, and she is the author of numerous articles on twentieth-century French and American fiction and film. She is currently completing a book on contemporary English-language fiction set in France.

John Engle is maître de conférences at the Université de Toulon et du Var and cofounder of the American University Center of Provence in Aix-en-Provence and Marseille. He has written extensively on modern and contemporary literature and has also published numerous articles on international education, including a recent contribution to the volume Rockin’ in Red Square: Critical Approaches to International Education in the Age of Cyberculture.

Michael Hollington has taught at the University of New South Wales and the Université de Toulouse—Mirail. He has written books on Dickens and Günter Grass, as well as numerous articles on literature from Shakespeare through the twentieth century.

Edward C. Knox is College Professor of French at Middlebury College. His current research deals with American discourse on France and the French in fiction, nonfiction, and the press, as well as with French views of France and the United States.
Rebecca Rauve is a graduate student at the University of Washington, Seattle. She is currently investigating how the crisis of the subject in modern literature resembles and differs from the loss of self reported in narratives of mystical experience.

Carol J. Singley is associate professor of English at Rutgers University, Camden. She is the author of Edith Wharton: Matters of Mind and Spirit and editor or coeditor of five volumes of critical essays on Wharton, feminist theory, Calvinism and modernism, and the American child. She is currently completing a book about representations of adoption in American literature and culture.