Pedagogy
Critical Practices for a Changing World

A special issue of American Literature (89:2)
Carol Batker, Eden Osucha, and Augusta Rohrbach, issue editors

Why we teach what we teach is just as important as why we study what we study, but it is seldom discussed as a field-defining issue. This special issue presents an opportunity to integrate discipline-specific knowledge more fully into a critical discussion of pedagogy. Contributors illustrate the intersection of theory and pedagogical practice while highlighting the disciplinary, institutional, and political contributions of American literature to higher education and community-based teaching and learning.

Contributors

Cassius Adair, Carol Batker, Stephen Brauer, Tina Chen, Andrew Donnelly, Sarah Ensor, Thomas Koenigs, Waleed F. Mahdi, Lisa Nakamura, Eden Osucha, Seth Perlow, Augusta Rohrbach, Danica Savonick, David M. Stewart, Andrea Stone, and Abram Van Engen
