FLOWERS IN THE WALL: Truth and Reconciliation in Timor-Leste, Indonesia, and Melanesia

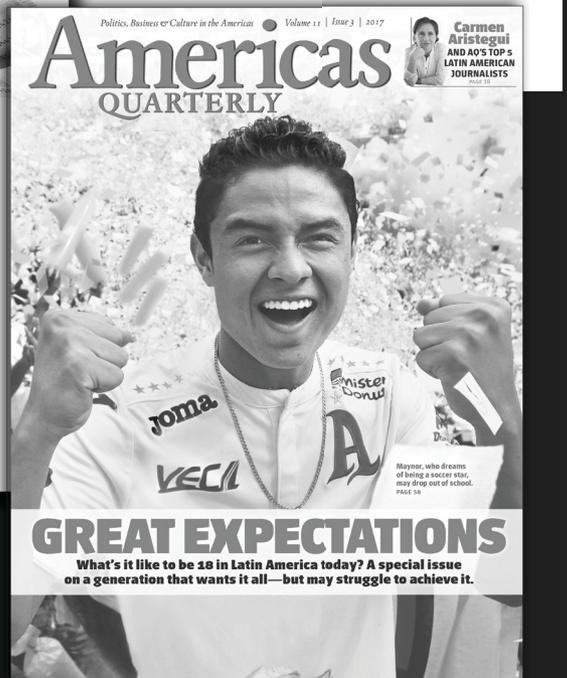

Edited by David Webster

Truth and reconciliation is complex, complicated, and ongoing. Although the operational phases of truth commissions have been well examined, the efforts to establish these commissions and the struggle to put their recommendations into effect are often overlooked. Flowers in the Wall explores the experience of truth and reconciliation in Timor-Leste, Indonesia and the Solomon Islands. This book is essential reading for all those interested in, or attempting to attain, truth and reconciliation.

New in Asian Studies

from Duke University Press

Decentering "Globalized" Asia

An issue of positions (25:4)

Kimberly Kay Hoang, Jessica Cobb, and Ya-Wen Lei, issue editors

This issue investigates cross-border exchanges that produce diverse forms of urban development, governance, modes of inclusion and exclusion, and social protest. Contributors shift Asia to the center of innovative scholarship on the changing geography of global culture, economy, and politics by describing how cross-border transformations play out at the regional, national, and local levels.

The Archipelago Observed: Knowledge and Transformation in Indonesia

An issue of East Asian Science, Technology and Society (11:1)

Sulfikar Amir, issue editor

This issue examines how science and technology have been part of recent trends of transformation in Indonesia. Contributors illustrate how scientific and technical practices contribute to social, political, and economic change across the archipelago. Essays discuss an array of transformations that characterize the co-constitution between individuals and institutions, on the one hand, and infrastructures and the environment, on the other.
